Once upon a time (when the guardian was not looking) I unhooked this picture and examined the inscription. I believe it is in the handwriting of Claude.

On the mount Mr. Roupell has written in pencil "Stalbent?"

This may be a portrait of Angelo Doni, later in life than when painted by Raphael.

Interior of Ranelagh, London, 1750.

It is interesting to compare this drawing, which shows the fireplace in the middle, with the picture by Canaletto in the National Gallery.

ITALIAN SCHOOL

Early Sixteenth Century

Virgin and Child with infant St. John.
Black chalk cartoon.
Size: 53 by 38 cm.

This drawing was ascribed by Signor Morelli to Girolamo Genga, probably because he studied under Timoteo delle Vite and Signorelli. No doubt traces of the influence of both these masters can be found in this drawing, but it bears no resemblance in style to the drawing by Genga in the Louvre, which is a study for his picture now in the Brera.

Collection: Chambers Hall.

Chambers Hall, to whose generosity and intelligent judgment the University of Oxford owes so many interesting works of art, is buried in the churchyard of Boldre in the county of Hampshire.
There also lies the Reverend William Gilpin, formerly Vicar of Boldre, and one of the founders of the Old Water Colour Society.
When my time arrives to be laid in the same beautiful churchyard, far removed from any human habitation, I shall be in good company.

g

No. 30

ANDREA DELLA ROBBIA

Virgin and Child.
Pen and wash on grey paper.
Circular, 24 cm. in diameter.

This drawing was ascribed to Luca della Robbia, but from sketches on a contract signed by Andrea della Robbia (formerly in my possession) I have no doubt about its being by the same hand.

No. 32

P. P. RUBENS

1577-1640

Study of his second wife (Helena Fourment), seated.
The picture is at Munich, No. 794.
Black chalk on grey paper.
Size: 48 by 31 cm.

Collection: Huquier.

No. 33

J. F. SCHALL (ascribed to)

Born about 1750

A young Lady, seated.
Black chalk heightened with white.
Size: 24 by 17 cm.

This drawing was sold at Christie's under the above name.
By comparison with the drawing (from the Goncourt collection, now in the Louvre) ascribed to J. H. Fragonard, and representing his daughter, Rosalie Fragonard, this might be the same young lady. In that case this drawing might be by Evariste Fragonard or by Marguérite Gérard. There is a somewhat similar drawing in the Groult collection in Paris, but I do not remember the artist's name.

No. 34

No. 38

A. WATTEAU

1684-1721

Head of young Girl wearing a mantilla.
Black and red chalk.
Size: 19½ by 17½ cm.

Engraved. I have seen an impression of this print at the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal, Paris, but cannot find the note I took at the time with the name of the engraver.

No. 39

FRENCH SCHOOL

Study of a Girl's Head.
Red chalk.
Size: 15 by 10 cm.

I am inclined to think that this drawing of a sad little face may be by A. Watteau and from the same model as the preceding drawing, No. 38.
Some day—when the war is over—when we are no longer interned—when we can journey to Paris without being cross-examined by authorities—when the treasures of the Louvre are again visible—I might find that the model is Mademoiselle D'Argenon (the youthful niece of De la Fosse, the painter), whose plain face but beautiful voice charmed Watteau and the friends of Crozat in his newly-built mansion where now stands the Opera Comique—"sororis filia cui suaves accentus musa invideret."
See "Watteau," by Paul Mantz, Paris, 1892, p. 82.

No. 40

1785-1841

Portrait of Mr. Nussey, a friend of Wilkie.
